atlanta | kozmic collision.

for oswald morgan, food isn't just a job. it's a family affair. taste what he means at recently opened kozmo.

the brooklyn-raised morgan, who boasts 20 years in the restaurant business, moved to atlanta in 1994. though he has partnered in many spots before (most notably the globe), kozmo is his first solo venture. named with his wife, karen, and daughter, zoe, in mind, morgan opened kozmo as a place that focuses on all the comforts of home. sure, it's situated in an industrial space, but the leather booths and soft lighting create a welcoming spot thanks to the help of judy gordon of O architects. and if that's not enough to convince you, then take a bite of the stick-to-your-ribs food on offer. want a sample? how about the bistro burger made from freshly ground brisket and sirloin, topped with white cheddar, caramelized onions and herbed mayo. the best part? nothing is priced over $13, including mac-n-cheese and a herb roasted chicken served with garlic mashed potatoes (made with chicken jus). and you'll need something to wash all those eats down, so order a "kozmojito" or homemade "kozropolitan" from mixologist jimmy rudnick, who uses freshly made cranberry and lime juices to create your concoction.

who says comfort has to have a time and space? kitchen closes at midnight on weekends, but the bar stays open as long as there's a crowd. kozmo. 11890 douglas road. near jones' bridge. alpharetta. 678.526.6094. now open. www.kozmogastropub.com
